The Regulations of the International Young Physicists' Tournament

I. International Young Physicists' Tournament
 The International Young Physicists' Tournament (IYPT) is a competition among teams of secondary school students in their ability to solve complicated scientific problems, to present solutions to these problems in a convincing form and to defend them in scientific discussions, called Physics Fights (PF).

II. The problems of the IYPT
 The 17 problems are formulated by the International Organizing Committee (IOC) and sent to the participating countries not later than 1 October. These problems may be used in any competition that could lead to selection of a national team. They may be used in International tournaments that involve foreign teams not taking part in IYPT.

III. The participants of the IYPT
 1. The national teams
 Any invited country, as well as the host country, is represented by one team. A country can only take part in the IYPT if it is nominated and accompanied either by the country's IOC representative or by the representative of a candidate (IMC).

How to prepare a competitive report?

To assist participants with creating a report that meets IYPT standards, we've prepared this open document. There are 5 key steps in this process. Problem Selection, Gathering Research, Approaching the Solution, Preparing your Experiment, and Self Evaluate and Submit. The steps below guide you through each of these. Remember, these are only intended to point you in the right direction, there is still a lot of personal effort you will have to put.

Step #01 - Problem Selection

- Study the problem statements of all 17 problems carefully. They're found here.
- Determine the theoretical expertise required to approach the given problems. For e.g. the problem Ring on the Rod requires a fair understanding of aerodynamics.
- Create a mind map about the required resources to conduct experiments beforehand.
- Factor in your skills and strengths and make an appropriate selection for round one. It's your only chance to chose until the finals.

Step #02 - Gathering Research

- The problems page at IYPT provides a link to "Resources". Use this as a starting point to find articles, videos, and other relevant literature relating to the problem.
- These resources may not be sufficient. You must seek out relevant research yourself by utilising search tools like scholar.google.com
- Carefully analyse the literature you've collected. Read a minimum of 2-3 research papers that directly tackle the selected problem. Papers are notoriously difficult to read - the level of scientific comprehension required is quite high. Try understanding what physics is occurring qualitatively at the very least.
- Do actual amounts of research for preparing your experiment. Building your own setup requires a strong basics in
