About the theme of Conference Seminar/Webinar:

Recent Development Trends in Chemistry:

Nanoscience, or nanotechnology, a branch of physical chemistry, is a applied field of science and technology that seeks to work with the properties of matter on the atomic and molecular scale 100 nanometres or smaller, and the fabrication of devices or materials that lie within that size range. Current research in nanotechnology includes the applications of molecular chemistry to molecular manufacturing, nanomaterials having general as well as special applications like treating cancer, energy harvesting for self-powered machines, chip fabrication, batteries, and aerospace materials. Laboratory research and innovation is still in the nascent stage in developing new materials such as carbon nanotubes, Nanopolymers, nanocomposites, Nano-crystals, nanoparticles and Also Recent advances in chemistry are most notable in environmental chemistry. Currently, research trends in environmental chemistry include advances in the areas of: water and electricity; water purification; biomass conversion; and air pollution control. Scientific advances have also happened in photovoltaic cell technology; solar powered fuel cells; hydrogen production; and medicinal chemistry
